INTRODUCTION

Decipher® era 1995-2001

The Star Wars Customizable Card Game was first released in December, 1995 by a company called Decipher, Inc. with the release of a 324 card set, Premiere Limited. Featuring content largely from the original Star Wars: Episode IV A New Hope, the set gave a strong base of main characters and cards recognizable to even casual Star Wars fans. The design of the cards and included lore on each one created an encyclopedia of sorts of the Star Wars universe through the cards themselves. Over the next six years, the game's following grew, and with a player base of over 40,000 strong, it became the second most popular trading card game in the world, after Magic: The Gathering.

Decipher released 11 full expansion sets for the game focused largely on the original Star Wars trilogy but in latter years incorporating elements from the recently released Episode I The Phantom Menace. Numerous revised sets in an unlimited format, as well as a number of smaller sets and items geared as much towards the collectors of the game as the players themselves would be released as well. However, in December, 2001, Decipher announced that it had been unable to extend its license with Lucasfilm, Ltd. to produce the game.

Unable to continue to produce, market, or support the game, Decipher instead created a volunteer committee of some of the game's most active and accomplished players. They christened this group the Star Wars Customizable Card Game: Players Committee. The Players Committee, or PC as it is better known, was given control of the oversight of the game, including the championship tournament season, and was also afforded the ability to create new cards for the game, although with a number of restrictions. Chief among them, was that the cards could only be distributed electronically. The PC could not create physical cards. Additionally, the PC could not utilize new images from the Star Wars films. Finally, everything the PC created must be distributed for free. No PC cards could be sold.

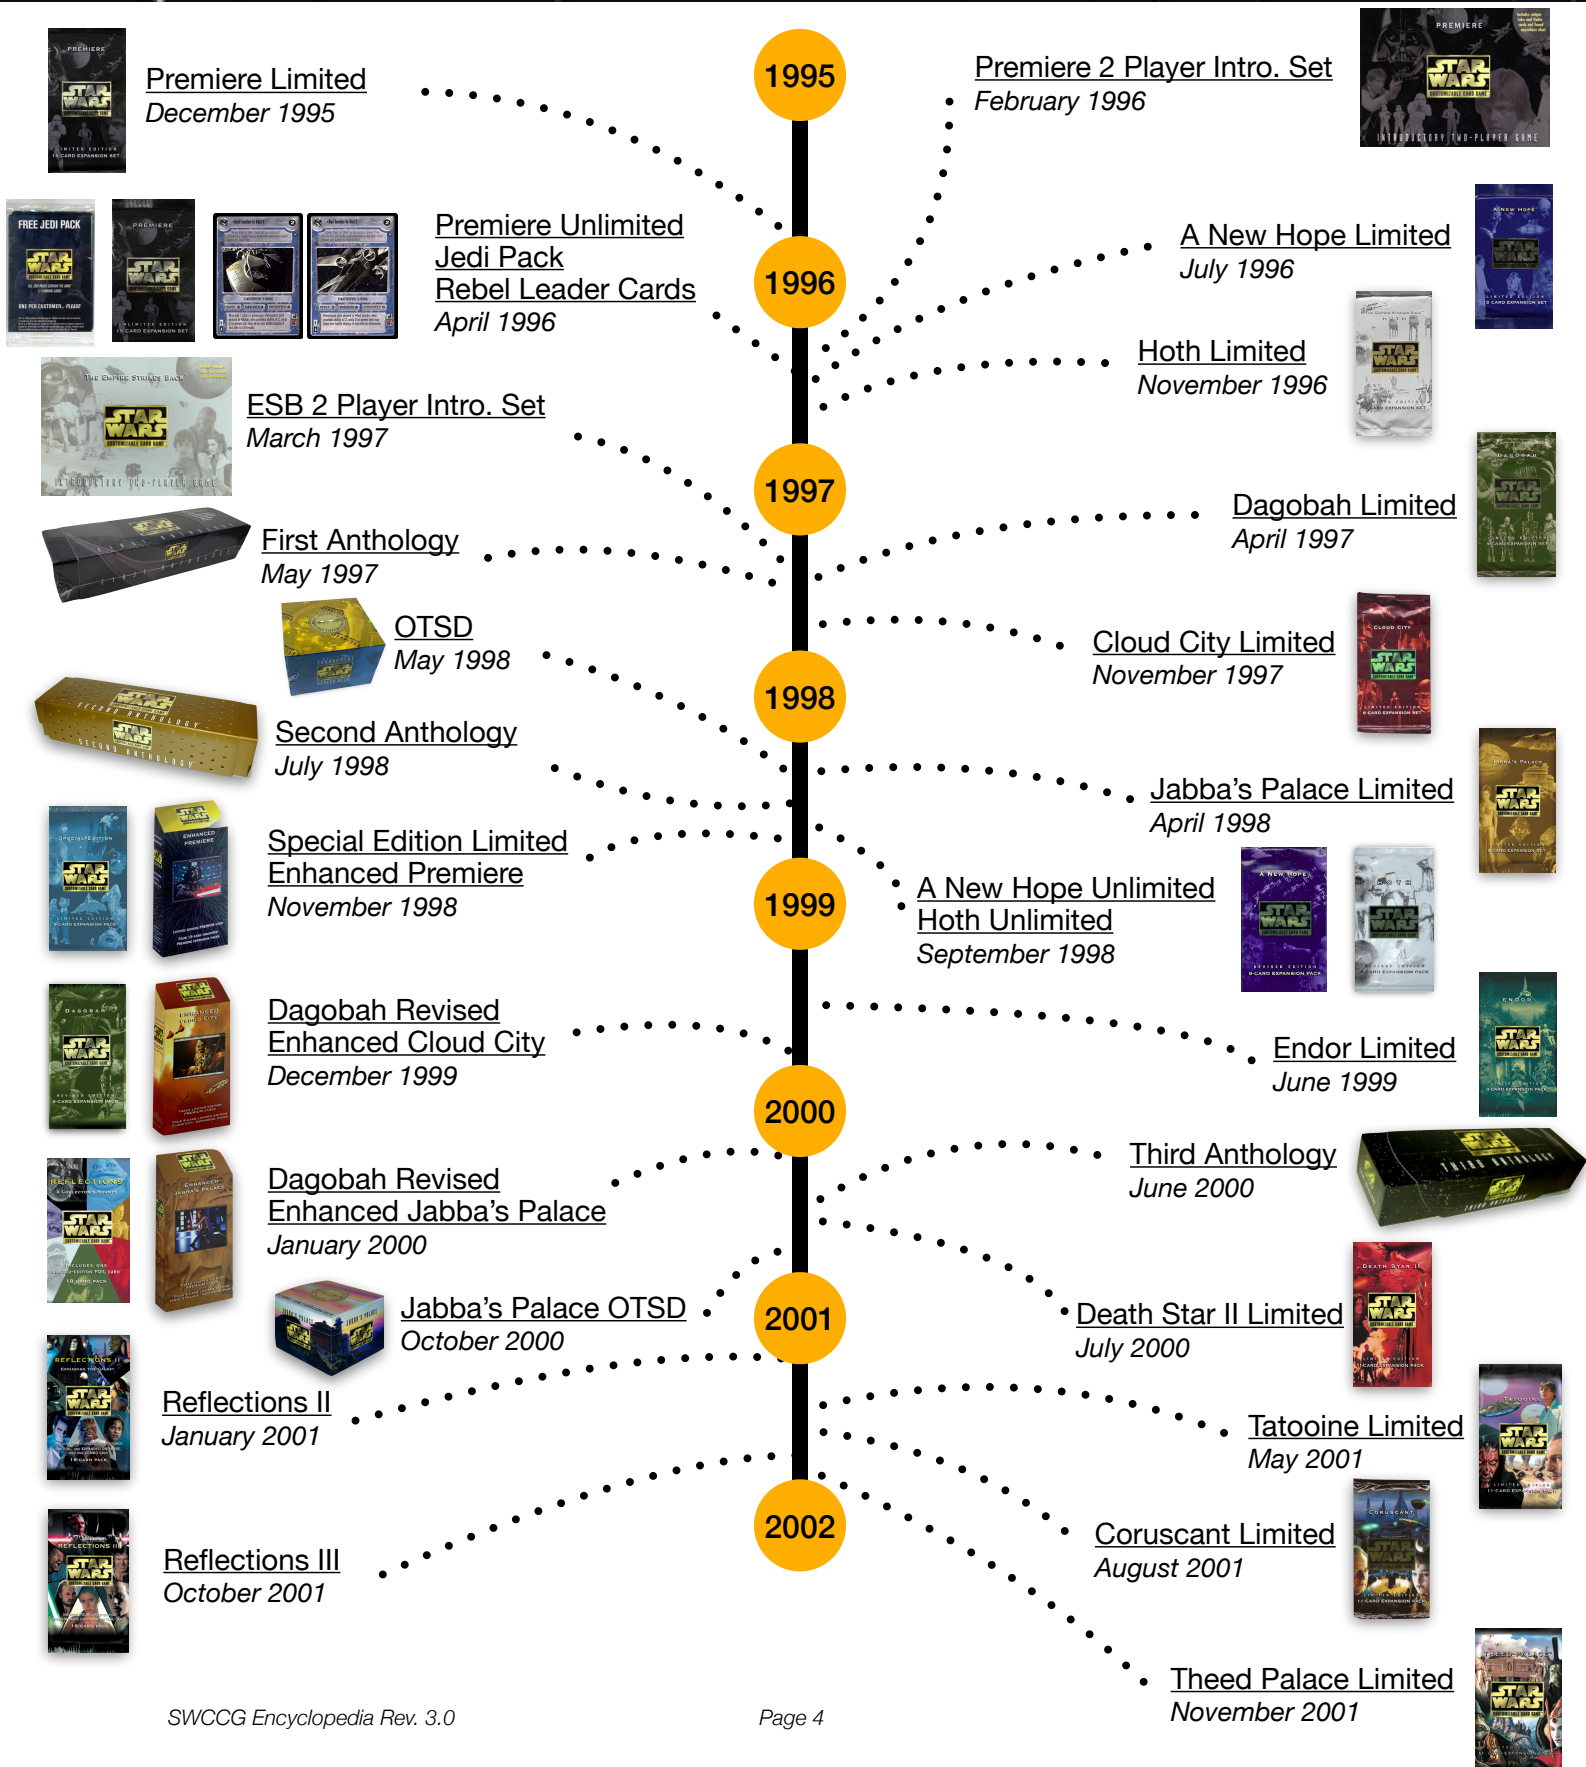

With the aforementioned restrictions, the availability of printed product and related promotional items has stayed fixed since 2001. A period of time in the early to mid 2000's where the ultimate fate of the game was uncertain as the PC was just starting out led to a selloff and highly discounted rates on sealed product left over from Decipher and distributors. The success of the PC as well as the continued popularity and growth of the Star Wars franchise have led to continued demand by both players and collectors for the game for product and has resulted in growing scarcity for product as it is purchased and or opened. Many of the younger players from the initial release period have aged to the point of having greater financial resources dispensable to them than their youth and in effect created the sweet spot often seen with collectibles as they can buy the product that eluded them years ago.

This encyclopedia, while very much an effort of the PC and fans of the SWCCG, focuses on the original set of physical product released during the Decipher era of the game. The virtual cards and promotional items more recently produced during the PC era of the game are cataloged on www.starwarsccg.org website along with a wealth of other information and community support areas.

TOURNAMENT FOILS

Tournament and Promotional Foils

Released: 2000-2001

28 FOIL CARDS (14 LIGHT SIDE / 14 DARK SIDE)

Tournament foils are foil versions of non-rare cards that were given out to tournament directors, who then gave one to the winner of their tournament and the other to a random participant in that tournament. Each month a new card was rotated into the program, with one leaving, meaning that a card was initially available for two months, with one usually being Light Side and one Dark Side. After the program ended, the tournament foils were still used as prize support, however without being confined to the original release schedule. Various other foils have been made as incentives for players, retailers, and distributors to buy products.

Electrobinoculars

(correctly placed the deploy cost and use cost in its game text)

Tatooine: Lars' Moisture Farm

Additionally, the unique, unpiloted starships (such as Black 2, Black 3, Vader's Custom TIE, Gold 1, Gold 5, Millennium Falcon, etc.) had the rule about requiring a pilot to use added directly into their game text.

ANNOUNCEMENT

STAR WARS CCG IN JAPAN!
RICH LOFTUS, WEB WRITER
APRIL 01, 1997

SOURCE: HTTP://WWW.DECIPHER.COM/NEWSANDHIGHLIGHTS/JAPANCOOLSTORY.HTML

The announcement in December of 1996 that Decipher and Japanese toy giant Takara Ltd., creators of Transformers toys and Battle Arena Toshienden Playstation Software, had agreed to act as partners in the development and distribution of a Japanese-language version (Nihongo-ban) of Star Wars Customizable Card Game excited the interest of players and collectors around the world. Here's the latest news from Tokyo.

Steve Stanley, Decipher Senior Vice President and General Counsel, visited Tokyo recently and returned with news of Takara's introduction of Star Wars Customizable Card Game Premiere Limited edition. We've asked Steve a few questions about his visit to help us understand what's happening in Japan.

Q: What was the name of the show you attended in Tokyo?

A: The annual event is the Tokyo Toy Show, held March 19 thru 23 at the futuristic Tokyo Big Sight exhibition space. The first three days were for the trade only. The final two days were open to the public, at which time Takara had a standing room only turnout for their gameplay demos and playing tables.

Q: How big is the Japanese market?

A: Japan is the second largest unified market for kids' products in the world, second only to the US. (population of Japan = 124 million)

Q: Is there real interest in CCGs in Japan?

A: The CCG marketplace is just taking off right now in Japan. All CCG sales are up strongly this year over last. The only Nihongo-ban CCGs on the market at present, other than Star Wars, are: Magic, Ultragate (based on Ultraman), Pocket Monsters, and Doomtrooper (which is pretty much dead). Pocket Monsters is geared to the 7 to 11 year old, and is not deemed competitive with the other CCGs on the market.

Q: As Decipher's marketing partner, and sole distributor in Japan, Takara will support a fully functioning Star Wars CCG tournament program?

A: They are now translating the Tournament Kit and expect the first sanctioned tourneys to start happening within the next month or two. (note: The www.decipher.com tournament locator now includes Japan in the newly created Ord Mantell region. A Japanese champion is expected to compete in this year's Star Wars CCG World Championships!)

Q: Are there any non-Japanese sources of Star Wars CCG "Nihongo-ban" Premiere?

A: If you want Limited Edition, you gotta go to Japan to get 'em!!!! Takara cannot ship outside of Japan. (note: There are no plans at present for distribution of any Nihongo-ban editions outside of Japan. Decipher is investigating ways for those outside of Japan to acquire the cards. Developments will be shared with the Decipher web community if and when they happen.)

Q: How are the Nihongo-ban Star Wars CCG cards selling?

A: The cards are red hot, because they are "cho beddi goo" (meaning super cool)! Takara pre- sold over 80% of their print run before the product hit the streets. Several of their customers showed up at the Tokyo Toy Show, held this year at the Tokyo Big Sight, situated in the Rinkai Fukutoshin area of the city--lots of futuristic architecture there--and wanted more product because it is flying off of the shelves so fast!

Q: Do you have any anecdotes to share regarding Japanese attitudes towards Star Wars?

A: "Older" Japanese (35 to 40 years old) are amazed at how very popular Star Wars is with the current young generation of 7 to 25 year olds. They say it is much more popular now than when it was first released in Japan 19 years ago, and even then it was very popular.

Many Japanese customers think that Star Wars CCG will be most popular CCG of all. Right now, Magic is Number One and Hobby Japan first shipped its Nihongo-ban last April. But Japanese customers think that Magic's western style of artwork is not appealing to the Japanese aesthetic, and the high quality sci-fi film images of starships, aliens, lightsabers and blasters (not to forget droids) on our cards are cho beddi goo!

Q: Has there been much mention of the introduction of this Japanese language version of Star Wars CCG in the Japanese press?

A: Yes, but I couldn't read it! Nothing in English.

Q: Anything else to add?

A: You might note that in the pictures from the Tokyo Toy Show, the gentleman whom I am shown congratulating on the huge success of Star Wars CCG's Nihongo-ban introduction is Hirohisa Satoh, Jr., President of Takara Ltd.

RELEASE INFORMATION

Takara would go on to partner with Decipher to release Japanese translation sets of Premiere, A New Hope, and Hoth in addition to 2 Player Premiere and 2 Player Empire Strikes Back introductory sets. English language packs including Dagobah were sold in Japan with a Takara overlabel on the pack for distribution. Poor translations led to a preference among Japanese players for the original English language cards over the Japanese language releases. Takara and Decipher ended their business relationship following these sets.

The artwork features a collage of iconic Star Wars elements: a close-up of Yoda's face on the left, a TIE fighter in the upper center, a Rebel transport ship on the left, and a group of characters including Chewbacca, Han Solo, and Leia Organa on the right. A circular inset in the top right corner displays the text "STAR WARS CUSTOMIZABLE CARD GAME". The title "STAR WARS" is prominently displayed in the center in a large, stylized font, with "CUSTOMIZABLE CARD GAME" written below it. At the bottom, the Japanese text "スター・ウォーズ コレクション カードゲーム" and "入門用 2プレイヤーセット" is printed.

KNOWN CARD ERRORS

Not counted in card count due to unplayable nature or lack of content variation
Decipher® era 1995-2001

BLANK CARDS

Starting with the Hoth expansion set, rare print sheets for various expansion sets would sometimes have a blank spot that was either left white or printed solid black with either a light or dark side back. These cards were usually removed after the cutting process during production, but occasionally they found their way into packs by mistake. As such 4 known variations exist. For obvious reasons, these were unplayable.

White front, light side back
Black front, light side back

White front, dark side back
Black front, dark side back

PRINT RUN ISSUES

PREMIERE BLUE

During the Premiere limited-printing, the yellow ink on some of the sheets had dried up, causing some of the cards to appear more blue than normal. The card's content is unchanged, the tint of the color just varies.

DEATH STAR II EMBOSSEMENTS

During the Death Star II production, some common / uncommon sheets with roller marks made it into packs. These are physical deformities to the card stock itself.

MISCUTS

Varying degrees of miscentering are seen throughout Decipher's production of SWCCG. In some extreme cases this resulted in parts of multiple cards making it on "one card". Lesser degrees simply resulted in uneven border widths.

HOTH TEST RUN

A test-run was ordered by Decipher® for a Hoth printing, during which the 27 Light side rares somehow ended up being printed with Dark side backs. Although never released to the public, a limited number have found their way into the secondary market via former employees.

EXECUTIVE GIFT SET

Limited Edition / Black Border

Released: 2001

INFORMATION

Only about 250 of these gift sets were produced to be used as gifts for executives within Lucasfilm and Decipher. They were never released to the public for purchase and only found their way into the secondary market following Decipher losing the Star Wars license as most never ended up being given away as a result. The gift set is a boxed set containing (almost) 2 complete sets of Limited Premiere in a white box with a black top featuring the SWCCG logo and "Decipher – The Art of Great Games" embossed in gold. No new or unique cards or items were part of the set.

CONTENTS

A complete "cut set" of Limited Edition Premiere
(in the reverse order that they appear on the sheets)

1 Rulebook (from the Unlimited Starter Decks)

MAINS

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

Ironically the gift set falls short of two complete sets of Premiere Limited due to Commons (C1). These (10) cards are the only ones in the set to appear only one time on their respective sheet.

CLOUD CITY

Bounty hunting,
lightsaber combat,
carbon-freezing,
and the battle for a city's soul...

What comes after Star Wars Customizable Card Game's scorching Dagobah expansion? The answer is Cloud City, which breaks in fall '97 with a taut, suspense-generating 180-card expansion.

Decipher's product development group intends to take players to the skies. Cloud City's play conventions bring new drama to this great game. Players are empowered to put a "price" on an enemy's head. Then they'll sit back and watch as their bounty hunters collect. The Empire's prisoners pray for rescue before a layer of carbonite freeze-dries them. The dark side has set a trap for young Skywalker, using Han as bait. Lando Calrissian's dilemma — aid his old friend, or obey the Dark Lord? Every choice is critical, and no choice is easy, in the all-out battle for Cloud City.

There is drama in the Cloud City cards.
Watch it spill on to the game table.

JABBA'S PALACE

Just when you thought it was safe to return to Tatooine...

Loaded with a host of new gameplay elements like Jabba's Sail Barge, the Rancor, the Sarlacc Pit, Bib Fortuna, and a host of aliens, Star Wars Customizable Card Game players will soon be ushered into a whole new domain of excitement and danger. Jabba the Hutt is seemingly unaffected by the awesome power of the Force. Rebels will be able to disguise themselves and try to sneak into Jabba's stronghold, but the villains are not easily fooled (with the possible exception of the Gamorrean Guards).

The 180-card Jabba's Palace set is the first of Decipher's card sets to be based on Return of the Jedi. Continuing its successful merchandising of the recent Dagobah and Cloud City editions, Jabba's Palace expansion packs will contain 9 cards each (1 rare, 3 uncommon and 5 common).

Out past the Dune Sea, there lies a place of corruption and excess, unmatched in the galaxy.
Welcome to Jabba's Palace.

ENDOR

The Classic Game Continues!

The Endor Limited Edition Expansion Set will be a stand-alone expansion, as well as a compatible expansion to other Classic Star Wars CCG products. (This means you can play a game with cards only from Endor, or you can play a game combined with cards from the other Classic expansions.)

Look for characters and scenes from Return of the Jedi™, featuring the struggle to destroy the Empire's base on the forest moon of Endor. The set will include new versions of several main characters, Imperial biker scouts, speeder bikes, the Rebel strike team and, of course, Ewoks along with their ingenious primitive devices.

Look for a very rare parallel subset of 18 of the coolest Endor cards in a stunning diffraction foil version. Randomly inserted in packs, these cards will be presented at various rarity levels – making some of them the rarest and most collectible Star Wars cards Decipher has produced to date. The Classic Star Wars CCG continues with Endor in a very big way!

- All-new 180-card set (black-bordered limited edition cards).
- Stand-alone expansion that's fully compatible with all other Classic Star Wars CCG products (not compatible with Episode I games).
- Exceptionally rare foil cards!
- New versions of main characters!
- Exciting new gameplay!
- Rules supplement in every display box.

THEED PALACE™

INVADE THEED PALACE TO WIN!

The Star Wars Customizable Card Game takes a monumental leap forward with the Theed Palace Limited-Edition Expansion! This set explodes with all-new "must-have" main character cards, new themes, sites, and objectives to form one of the most exciting new expansions for the Star Wars CCG!

This 120-card expansion is the 3rd set that merges the timeline of Episode I with the classic trilogy. Theed Palace focuses around the scenes and climactic events shown in the finale of Star Wars: Episode I The Phantom Menace. Meanwhile, a battle rages in space as droid starfighters swarm to protect the droid control ship and overwhelm the Naboo starfighters (and their mystery pilot).

Here's your chance to get two of the potentially most powerful cards ever introduced in the Star Wars CCG - Darth Maul with Lightsaber and Jedi-San with Lightsaber. Relive and re-create their exciting confrontation! Will your outcome be the same as in the movie? Also look for Darth Sidious, a new version of Mace Windu, the Gungans, Naboo, Neimoidians with their mechanized armies, and the introduction of the city of Otoh Gunga, our first underwater location!

- Episode I is now fully integrated into the core Star Wars CCG
- Exciting new gameplay!
- Compatible with the Classic Star Wars CCG (Not compatible with Young Jedi™ or Jedi Knights™)

STAR WARS™ CUSTOMIZABLE CARD GAME™

ENHANCED PREMIERE

"Mains and their Toys!"

The Star Wars CCG is growing! More and more new players are coming into the game daily. We've been listening to what they want - and what they want is access to the main character cards! For some people, not having the main characters when they play the Star Wars CCG makes them feel like they're not playing Star Wars. (We won't have that!) Our response? Enhanced Premiere.

Our product development team has designed this innovative new product to offer new and existing players and collectors the opportunity to instantly obtain and play a game with their favorite character (with a weapon)!

Each Enhanced Premiere will contain 1 of 6 new main character cards (Luke, Vader, Obi-Wan, Boba Fett, Han and Leia) and 4 Star Wars CCG Premiere Unlimited Edition boosters. The six new & exclusive limited edition cards are the first ever to combine a character and a weapon in one card. Luke, Vader and Obi-Wan will be armed with a lightsaber. Leia, Han and Boba are armed with their blaster of choice. These cards are powerful, but they are not powerful enough to take any value away from the original character and weapon cards. Each pack will be presented in a box with a die-cut window, which will allow you to see which premium card is inside.

- Instant access to the main characters (and their weapons)
- 6 new & exclusive black-bordered premium cards (1 in each pack)
- Characters and weapons combined in one card (a first in this game)
- 4 Premiere Unlimited Boosters in each pack (opportunity for the original mains)

A character and weapon on one card - all you need now is a target!

CARD "EASTER EGGS"

At times the card creators (or art department) would add additional flavor or inside jokes to the card lore or card images. While they have no impact on game play, here is a list of some of the "Easter Eggs" contained on the cards. Source: <http://decipher.com/artshow/eastereggs/starwarsccg/index.html>

Gravel Storm (Premiere)
The phrase "This Card Rocks" appears in the copyright line

Bespin Motors Void Spider THX 1138 (A New Hope)
"THX 1138" is the title of George Lucas' first major film.

Note: THX is also what Lucas named his successful sound company, and quality theatre sound system. In addition, Luke told the Imperial officer they were transferring Chewie from cellblock 1138.

Dark Waters (A New Hope)
Ewok doll floating in the dark waters.

Defel (A New Hope)
Hidden on the uniform shoulders are the letters "WYOU" and "XERB". "WYOU" is Wolfman Jack's (American Graffiti) first radio station (circa 1960), in Virginia. Decipher is in WYOU's broadcast area. XERB is the station he was on later in California, where George Lucas heard and decided to include him in American Graffiti.

Death Star Trench (A New Hope)
"The Art of Great Games" is one of Decipher's trademarks and motto!

Hyperwave Scan (A New Hope)
The X's and O's create a Tic-tac-toe game

Luke's Hunting Rifle (A New Hope)
The Campbell's soup can reads "Cream of Womprat". Campbell's is a famous soup company. Joseph Campbell is an additional egg, referring to the author Joseph Campbell, one of the big influences on George Lucas in developing the Star Wars mythology and history.

M-HYD "Binary" Droid (A New Hope)
"(C) 11111001100 DECIPHER, INC." 11111001100 is 1996 in binary (a base 2 numbering system instead of base 10) Star Wars mythology and history.

Retract the Bridge (A New Hope)
The lights form the letters that spell out the word VERTIGO. Probably what Luke and Leia felt at that moment, and also an Alfred Hitchcock reference.

Scanners Tech (A New Hope)
Hidden in the background panel are the letters "WBN", which are the call letters for the radio station WBN (Radio station from Radioland Murders)

Sensor Panel (A New Hope)
Light and Dark card backs are images of Star Wars Customizable Card Game cards. The Words "ANEWHOPE" can be found in digital mileage readout display. "A New Hope" is the name of the Star Wars Customizable Card Game Expansion Set

Tzizvvt (A New Hope)
Alien icon has multiple eyes.

Undercover (A New Hope)
"Good Evening" written vertically. These words, along with the profile shadow on the wall, are a reference to the classic TV series "Alfred Hitchcock Presents." At the beginning of the show, Hitchcock's shadow, in profile, would appear on a wall. When introducing the show, he always began with these words.

Yavin 4: Briefing Room (A New Hope)

You're All Clear Kid! (A New Hope)
253 located in the center bottom of the image. 253 is the street address number of Decipher's offices (253 Granby Street)

CARD "EASTER EGGS" continued

At times the card creators (or art department) would add additional flavor or inside jokes to the card lore or card images. While they have no impact on game play, here is a list of some of the "Easter Eggs" contained on the cards. Source: <http://decipher.com/artshow/eastereggs/starwarsccg/index.html>

Crash Landing (Hoth)

"J. G. Ballard" is printed on the side of the snowspeeder, on the front facing of the metal plating, to the side (underneath) the cockpit. J. G. Ballard is a reference to author James Graham Ballard, who wrote "Crash" in 1973. "Crash" fits in with the theme of Crash Landing.

Debris Zone (Hoth)

One of the pieces of landing shrapnel is a tiny snowman. The theme of the Hoth set is winter and snow!

Deflector Shield Generators (Hoth)

Hidden in the image of the struts underneath the globe reads "B. Fuller".

Note: In 1983, Buckminster Fuller was awarded the Medal of Freedom (the highest award given to civilians in the States) by then-President Ronald Reagan. Among his most notable inventions and discoveries are geodesic structures, similar to the Star Destroyer Deflector Shield Generators.

Evacuation Control (Hoth)

Image of Decipher's home page, <http://www.decipher.com>, is displayed in the overhead monitor.

In keeping with the theme of the card, a knife, fork and spoon are hidden in the ice!

FX-7 (Effex-Seven) (Hoth)

Tiny fish are swimming in the bacta tank.

Fury Fury (Hoth)

Imbalance (Dagobah)

The Interrupt and Dagobah symbol are tilted at a 45 degree angles.

Landing Claw (Dagobah)

The "Hitchhikers Guide to the Galaxy" identity has been superimposed on the ship's background.

Lost In Space (Dagobah)

There is a hidden image of "Robot" in the effects symbol.

Rogue Asteroid (Dagobah)

It may look like an asteroid, but it's a potato!

Note: Potatoes were actually used as asteroid 'props' throughout the filming of the movies.

At times the card creators (or art department) would add additional flavor or inside jokes to the card lore or card images. While they have no impact on game play, here is a list of some of the "Easter Eggs" contained on the cards. Source: <http://decipher.com/artshow/eastereggs/starwarsccg/index.html>

Smuggler's Blues (Dagobah)

Card title and lore are a play on Glenn Frey's song of the same name

Visored Vision (Dagobah)

If you look closely at the copyright, it says "Blues Bros." It refers to the image of Chewie and Han both in dark glasses, a look made famous by John Belushi and Dan Ackroyd in the movie "The Blues Brothers."

Bionic Hand (Cloud City)

The word $6,000,000 is etched in the wrist flap.

Cloud City Sabacc (Cloud City)

- The cover art for the Star Wars: The Clone Wars Expansion Rules Supplements features a dramatic sky scene. At the top, a large, dark, saucer-shaped object, possibly a Separatist ship, is seen from below, floating in a blue sky with wispy clouds. Below this, a bright, glowing nebula or explosion of light fills the middle section. In the foreground, a large, dark, and somewhat abstract shape, possibly a planet or a large ship, is visible against the lighter background. The overall color palette is dominated by blues, greys, and bright whites/yellows from the light effects. The title 'STAR WARS' is prominently displayed in its iconic yellow font with black outlines, set within a black rectangular frame. Below it, the words 'EXPANSION RULES' and 'SUPPLEMENTS' are written in a clean, white, sans-serif font. At the very bottom, the specific expansions included are listed: 'for A NEW HOPE™, MOTHS™, DAGOBAH™ & CLOUD CITY™'. The 'SCRYE' logo is in the top left corner, and the 'PRESENTS' text is in the top right corner.

How a Star Wars card is made

In the darkness of his spacious office, the lights dimmed so as to focus attention on the blobs of blue and gray flickering across the screen, Dan Burns looks less like a graphics designer than a police scientist scrutinizing strands of DNA.

"There," says Burns, the 37-year-old vice president of Decipher Inc. and creative director for the Star Wars Customizable Card Game. He leans back, eyes riveted on a hairy image of a humanoid with the head of a toucan. "He's in the cantina scene from the first Star Wars film, but you can barely see him. He became our Tazffitt card."

"Most people," he adds with a smile, "don't know he's in the movie."

It's a magic trick of sorts, isolating bits and pieces from the shadows of a 20-year-old film, sprucing them up, then turning them into game cards. Tazffitt may be unknown to movie buffs, but he's available to gamers in all his fuzz-faced glory as one of the 162 cards in the New Hope expansion for the Star Wars CCG which debuted in June.

Decipher, also home to the Star Trek: The Next Generation Customizable Card Game, doesn't look like a magic parlor. Sandwiched between a pair of dilapidated shops on a nondescript street in downtown Norfolk, Va., it's the kind of place you could pass a thousand times and never notice. Open the plain glass door, however, and it's like you've stepped into a secret wing of the U.S.S. Enterprise, a four-story high-tech tangle of sleek corridors and serpentine stairwells. Soft light spills from the high black ceilings, washing over animation cels of Bugs Bunny and Daffy Duck that adorn the glossy white walls. Throughout, it's library quiet, broken only by the distant clicks of computer keys.

Here, a staff of 35, tripled in number since 1994 and the success of the Star Trek: The Next Generation CCG, labors to put the finishing touches on the latest batch of Star Wars cards. It's an enormous undertaking, a three-stage process involving graphics, rules and lore development, with all three stages occurring more or less simultaneously.

Let's see, step by step, how they pull it off.

GRAPHICS

1. PRELIMINARIES

"An expansion like New Hope takes the art department about four months," says Burns. He begins with a concept list from the product development team. "For a 162-card expansion, I get about 220 ideas, mostly vague descriptions like 'a card that can fire weapons.'"

Burns produces a fat loose-leaf notebook. "This is our bible for New Hope," he says, thumbing through page after page of black-and-white photocopies. From these hundreds of images, most from the first film, he makes preliminary matches with ideas from the concept list. Though Burns went down a similar road for the Star Trek CCG, Star Wars has been a tougher trip. For Star Trek, he had more than 150 hours of video footage from which to cull images. For Star Wars, he has less than three hours of film.

2. FILM EDITING

At the far end of the graphics floor, beyond the work station where the Decipher website is under construction, stands a sunless room dominated by a bulky film-editing machine, big enough to double as a paperweight for Godzilla. Leslie Burns, Decipher production manager (and Dan's sister), watches the overhead monitor as a reel of 70-millimeter film unspools on the editor's desk-top. She's looking at the original "Star Wars," a first-generation print provided by George Lucas. "Editors for 70-millimeter are no longer readily available in the U.S.," says Leslie, clad in stylish black from head to toe. "It breaks down, people from Germany have to fix it."

On the monitor, a flustered C-3PO takes a few steps, stops, then moves backward as Leia toggles the sequence back and forth. "C-3PO's definitely my favorite," she says. "He always seems so defeated."

Finding a frame she likes, Leslie freezes it, tags it with tape, then splices it out—a process she's repeated more times than she can count. "We've culled over 1,000 frames for New Hope alone," she says, replacing the clipped frame with a blank slug to frame numbers will remain in sequence. "We try to grab scenes that people haven't seen." While most would assume these are outtakes or unused footage, Decipher actually lifts obscure images from the background that viewers barely glimpse when viewing "Star Wars."

Some scenes prove more aggravating than others. "The cantina was very, very dark all around. We knew the aliens were in there. We could see some highlights and the shapes of their heads, but couldn't see them in color." A frame-by-frame hunt turned up nearly 40 different specimens.

SEPTEMBER 1996 55

Certain characters also decline to cooperate. "For Leia's character card, we wanted an image that was serious but still attractive. In the Death Star scene, we found a close-up. We had at least 30 frames to pick from, but there was literally only one frame that looked right." All told, the initial cutting for the premiere edition takes about two weeks. Another week or so is devoted to a New Hope color.

3. CD SEARCH

While his sister clips frames, Burns combs a stack of photo compact discs, searching for odds and ends. "I have about 30 CDs from the Lucasfilm archives. I look for behind-the-scenes stuff," says Dan. Each CD contains about 100 images that didn't necessarily find their way into the movies: production models, outtakes and make-up tests. On his computer screen, Burns displays a grainy gray photo of a giant playing maracas. "This is Kiki Keed'kak. We're looking at a picture of the puppet." The strings are still visible. "For the card, we collected him—grues, of course, then dropped him into the bar setting." Tazffitt the fly was also taken from a CD photo, as he was too muddy in the movie.

4. SCANNING

Dan Burns sends the film clips and photos to Spencer Printing in Richmond, Va. to be scanned, a process that digitizes the images and transfers them to computer discs. It takes about four days to do 100 scans.

5. RETOUCHING THE EASY ONES

After the images have been scanned, they're ready for retouching. "All of them need retouching," says Dan. "Some a little, some a lot." Grain and wash-out, which give the images the appearance of faded photographs, make the job especially tough. "That's just the nature of film," he shrugs. "We didn't have these problems with Star Trek—it's digital video." For a 162-card expansion, close to 400 images will be retouched. Some may be redone five or six times. The retouching phase lasts at least two months. "We always hope it'll go faster, but it usually doesn't."

Though Dan Burns oversees the operation and makes the final decisions, a good chunk of the work falls to computer artists Rob Burns (no relation to Dan) and Joe Boulden, who occupy adjoining work stations separated by a tall partition with a glassless window. Perched in the window is a Cinehead action figure, which Joe occasionally swags for Darth Vader.

The 29-year-old Rob, a graduate of Virginia Commonwealth University, recalls how he hooked up with Decipher. "I answered an ad in the newspaper. I didn't even know it was a game company. That was 10 months ago. Since then, Wookles and droids have pretty much consumed his professional life."

He sets aside his headphones—he's been listening to the "Phantom of the Opera" soundtrack—and turns to his Macintosh. Instead of a mouse, Rob uses a digitized tablet, a plastic slab the size of a place mat. By moving a digital stylus (or light pen) over the tablet's magnetic field, he manipulates images on the screen. Like all Decipher artists, Rob has access to computer power of staggering proportions for a New Hope alone, the system stores digital information equivalent to 5,000 sets of the Encyclopedia Britannica.

A flick of the stylus and a pixel in a cockpit fills the screen—a New Hope's Gold 2 Pilot, to be exact. "I started out as a frame in the movie from the Death Star scene, a Y-wing going down a trench," says Rob. The image looks bleached and faded. "We can adjust four levels of color: black, cyan, magenta and yellow," he adds. Rob isolates the pilot's helmet with a stylus flick, then activates the computer's saturation tool (which "heightens" an image's color). Instantly, the helmet changes from a near-brown to a vivid orange. A few tweaks of the black level sharpen the pilot's features. The smear tool adds a bit of texture. The whole process takes about 30 minutes.

Rob removes the pilot and replaces him with a scene of a squat droid, RS-42, who appears as a card in the premiere set. "He was at a traffic stop outside the cantina in the first film," says Rob, moving the stylus in a circle to highlight the droid, isolating him. He blurs the background for a 3-D effect, then punches up the color to make the droid bright yellow. It takes less than 10 minutes.

6. RETOUCHING THE HARD ONES

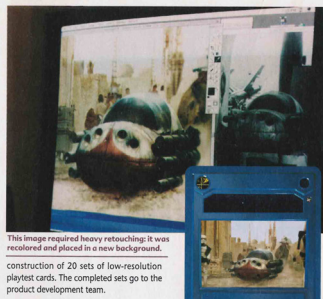

Not every retouching goes so smoothly. Joe, a 31-year-old Virginia native and "Star Wars" fanatic, says major surgery on a troublesome image can take up to two days. With a click (he prefers a mouse to a stylus) he summons a bluish blob to his screen. "It's a personal landscape. In the film, it's parked behind the cantina. You'd never notice it," he says. West End Games, the Pennsylvania-based company responsible for the Star Wars roleplaying game, identified it as a Mobeque. A publicity photo dug out of the Lucasfilm archives provides a look from a different angle.

That armed, Joe attacks the image with Photoshop software. He isolates the Mobeque and paints over it digitally, eliminating much of the grain and dirt. He adjusts the contrast "like a TV set" and bends the colors with the image tool. "It pushes colors around," he says. He calls up a street frame from the Mos Eisley sequence, "right after the guards tell Luke and Obi-Wan they can pass." With the path tool, he highlights the Mobeque, lifts it out of its old frame and drops it in the new one.

A few erasures, a couple of corrections and he's done. The completed card, part of the New Hope set, shows an image that didn't appear in the movie. "But if we do our job right, you'll think you're seeing something you remember," adds Joe.

7. PLAYTEST SETS

Dan Burns spends a week or so supervising the

8. IMAGE CONSTRUCTION

Burns then turns his attention to perhaps the most demanding step in the entire process. "At this point, we still have some blanks," he says, referring to cards requiring images unavailable in the film or the photo archives. "These images, we have to construct."

"We did four or five totally new images for the premiere set," says Joe Boulden, scrolling through the seemingly endless list of card titles on his screen. "We're doing about the same number for a New Hope."

Case in point: the T-16 Skyhopper. Rob Burns opens a copy of The Best of the Lucasfilm Archives by Mark Cotta Vaz and Shingji Hata and points to a draft spacecraft illustration. "The T-16 was intended for the movie,

Some images were created from scratch. Rob gets ready to add a ship he created to altered background.

but Lucasfilm abandoned it," he says, "so I have to make one on the computer."

First he creates the ship's skeleton, a cluster of geometric shapes. Using the book as reference, he fills in the ship's tail, colors it, then adds dents, rivets and recessed screws. For the background, he locates a frame near the end of the film—a guard looking over a jungle on Yavin. He erases the guard, then blurs the trees to make the ship look like it's actually moving. Start to finish, it takes him a week.

Rob gives a similar treatment to GH1K, an obscure piece from the holographic chess set. "This one's based on a partial photo from Lucasfilm," after manufacturing a suitable likeness, Rob brightens the colors, then gives it a transparency effect to make it look holographic.

Joe bases his TIE Scout, a vehicle that isn't in the film but appears in the premiere card set, on a drawing from the Star Wars roleplaying game. "I took the picture, stretched it, angled it and added pieces to the tail. Then I painted it." How about the planets? "We make most of them up," says Joe, citing Kessel as an example. "West End added Kessel was vaguely potato-looking. So we got a potato..." he laughs. "Not really."

LORE

The design team also handles the lore descriptions found on every card—more again, this process often occurs simultaneously with the nearly year-long design of a CCG.

"We make up a fair amount of the lore," says Campbell. "I've pulled from my own knowledge of Star Wars and Campbell works closely with Bill Smith, George Strayton and Paul Sudlow at West End Games. "They cut almost to the research arm of Lucasfilm. When we define a card we want to make, we ask them for information. "Take a card collected from Lucasfilm and books like Bill Strickland's Guide to the Star Wars Universe. Campbell's team puts it all together and, with Lucasfilm's approval, makes the final decision."

Allen requires extra attention, since there's not much about them in the movies. Take Tazffitt. For instance, Campbell, "West End didn't have much info on him. So we decided that because he's fly, he plays power of the trash compactor. It also gains power when he's around Grand Moff Tarkin, because of a scene in the movie where he says, 'I'm going to fly you out of here.' "The team also determined that Tazffitt is male, and that he's hiding from the Inquisitors on Tatooine. In all future films, novels and other spin-offs where Tazffitt appears, he and his card set a primary reference."

Mal'fuld "Callos, the "droids' leader" often from the premiere set, posed another challenge. "His is absolutely nothing in the film about it," says Campbell. "All you see are his legs sticking out of the frame (outside the Ewok's opening)." So we decided it had to be tall, and that it looked like a bird. "They also decided it was a weaver. I took a 3.5 meter of tape—after the last—on a tape and they gave me a tape of a weaver from a film about firefighters. "Because it's his leg, we were looking when we came up with that," says Campbell.

9. FRAMING

Surprisingly, the colored borders on the card fronts are not computer-generated. Instead, Dan Burns contracted a sign company in Los Angeles to manufacture several aluminum frames, each about the size of a briefcase. "We photographed them, and then added dings and dents in the computer."

The cards receive their frames about a month into the design process. Why go to so much trouble? "A lot of CCGs look alike to me," says Burns. "Besides, we never would've gotten the light right if we did it all in the computer."

10. EASTER EGGS

Fans of the Star Trek CCG might remember the Rascals card, which showed some kids peering through a tube with a sign overhead reading "You Must Be This High to Ride This Ride." Decipher called this an Easter Egg, a graphic enhancement added just for laughs. During full in the retouching phase, the computer artists sneak in the eggs. The Star Wars premiere set was egg-less, but New Hope has about a half-dozen. So where are they? Decipher isn't telling.

SHADOWS OF THE EMPIRE

Source: <http://www.decipher.com/starwars/whatisit/afterdeathstar.html>

- Originally scheduled for August 2000. Shadows Of The Empire was to be based on the Star Wars novel bearing the same title and whose storyline takes place between the events portrayed in the Empire Strikes Back and Return of the Jedi motion pictures. The set was planned as a mini expansion of about 20 cards, but instead many of the card concepts were released as premium cards in Reflections II

SKYWALKERS

- Planned as the first of a series of character-based expansion sets, Skywalkers was scheduled for a November 2000 release. This set planned to feature character mechanics that focus on Luke, Leia, Vader and the relationships that link all three of them together. Skywalkers was going to introduce a new gameplay concept code-named "Lichtenstein." Rather than bring new versions of the characters into the game, "Lichtenstein" cards would grant new capabilities to existing character cards.

JEDI MASTERS

- Was planned to be the second character-based expansion set, with a February 2001 release date. This set would focus on Yoda, Obi-Wan, the Emperor and his Imperial cohorts, as well as their interrelationships. Jedi Masters was planned to further expand the Lichtenstein concept from Skywalkers.

SCOUNDRELS

- The third character-based expansion set, was scheduled to release in September 2001. This set focused on Han, Lando, Boba Fett, Jabba and their alien friends (and foes). Like the two sets before it, it would incorporate Lichtenstein cards.

REFLECTIONS GOLD

Source: <https://forum.starwarsccg.org/viewtopic.php?f=87&t=18282>

- This set was the closest to an actual release, but due to logistics and timing associated with the loss of the Star Wars licensing, a public release never occurred. Decipher pleaded with Lucasfilm to allow a free PDF release of the cards to fans, but they were denied. Some leaked emails and scans / as well as play test versions of the cards surfaced in the mid 2000's. A full card list is now available.

LIGHT SIDE MARA JADE

- While the dark side version of Mara Jade was released in the Enhanced Jabba's Palace set, photographs were taken at the same shoot of model Shannon Baksa in a green suit for a light side Mara Jade. The light side card never made it into an official Decipher release but surfaced at MPC 2008 after being shared by the PC from archives.

OTHER FOREIGN LANGUAGE RELEASES

- Additional language releases were planned beyond the Japanese ones that came to fruition. It is unknown whether the lukewarm reception of the Japanese language cards or other factors played into the lack of releases. Anime style cards were also considered for the Japanese market.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This guide is intended to provide both current and former players and collectors of Decipher's Star Wars Customizable Card Game with an accurate history of each set release and promotional item produced for the game. It will be subject to revision for accuracy and completeness. As more products are re-discovered and information is obtained, they will be added to subsequent revisions of the guide. If in the process of compiling the material for the document, some inaccurate information made its way into this guide, or you have additional information you think should be included, please contact advocate@starwarsccg.org so that it may be amended and included in a future release. We are especially interested in filling in any of the "Image Needed" placeholders.

Additionally, while many pictures came from private collections, a few of the images used in this document were obtained via "Google" searches or even contained within posts to the Players Committee website forums (www.starwarsccg.org). Although the images were borrowed with the intent of sharing the information with fellow players and collectors, if you believe you are the owner of such image and/or are unwilling to share it despite putting it on the internet or to the forums, you may also contact advocate@starwarsccg.org or a member of the Advocate Council to have it removed or credited to you.

Finally, while much of the information in the guide was obtained either through personal knowledge or experience in collecting the cards, portions of it have been obtained through message board posts or emails with other players of the game. As this guide is more about providing information about the collecting aspect of the game in one centralized document than it is to be a resume of "who knows what," by design, no one was "credited" with an image or information unless they specifically asked to be or if the information they provided was so essential that it would be tantamount to not citing them as a source. However, it would be a mistake to not give a special thank you to all of the various posts in the PC Collecting Thread (especially from ShadowLeader), and pictures provided by a number of very helpful players, including Hayes, which were beyond instrumental. So a special thanks and show of gratitude to them, as well as all others.
